Board Withholds Approval of $852,000 Bid on Helix High

Low Bid of $22 Thought Too High

The Grossmont Union High School Board of Trustees faced with a low bid of $852,000 submitted by O. L. Carpenter Company, withheld approval pending further study. Other bids submitted were Riha Construction Company $898,000, L. D. Anderson $931,000 and Rohrbacher, Santa Ana, $950,000. The low bid was $300,000 or 60% above the estimated cost of construction of a group of four buildings to be erected on the Helix High School site.

Harold G. Hughes, assistant superintendent, pointed out that the original estimate was made in January 1950 and that prices have risen considerably since that time. It was also pointed out that construction let in March cost $17 a square foot compared with $22 for this bid which failed to obtain Board approval.

Board spokesmen emphasized that the board would exhaust every avenue to obtain a lower bid. It was felt that the $5 increase since March was unjustifiable since ceilings have been placed on materials. Failure of subcontractors to engage in competitive bidding was a possible reason for the increase.

The question which now faces the Board is, will there be more competition if the bid is resubmitted in September? A second problem involves the attitude of the State Division of Finance toward the high bid and possible delay in completion of the construction project.

The excessive cost placed the board in the uncomfortable position of being squeezed between the pressure of mounting enrollment with the half-day session and a desire to obtain as complete a plant as is possible under the state regulations. It is possible that the increased cost could be met only by elimination of the two shop buildings from the Helix plant.

The board set August 2 for a meeting to reconsider the entire problem.

Russia is Not Ready for War

Rear Admiral Wm. Fleming told the Lemon Grove Kiwanis Club Wednesday noon that Russia is not ready for war.

He pointed out that it was not feasible for Russia to bomb the United States or make any huge attack on this country because they did not have the ships either for an air or land invasion.

He said that the mammoth man power of Russia was of but little avail without the mechanism to carry out their objectives.

Modern warfare is so different from the wars of other days that armies no longer forage off the country they are fighting, and the lack of highways in Russia prevents them from moving big armies in a swift manner, as compared to the United States, that he does not believe the Kremlin will chance a war with us. He also said that the Russian leaders know that a war now would mean the end of Communism.

Big Pumper Due Here Next Week

Lemon Grove's big fire truck will arrive within the next 10 days or two weeks, Chairman Mulkey of the fire commissioners was informed by the Mack Truck Company today.

The truck is being lettered today. This means that it is completed and ready for duty.

The time of arrival will depend upon the availability of a representative of the fire underwriters, who must approve the truck under severe tests, before it can be accepted by the fire district.

This truck, of 1,000 gallon capacity, was purchased from the Mack Truck Co., last fall, at the same time the smaller truck was contracted for.

Delays in material held up the big truck, though the company was able to make delivery on the 500 gallon pumper several months ago.

When the new truck has been put in operation the commissioners are planning a big demonstration of the Lemon Grove fire fighting equipment, that the people of the community may become acquainted with the department, know its functions and be in a position to co-operate with the commissioners and firemen in keeping Lemon Grove relatively free from fires.

Malik's Korean Peace Proposal Causing World-Wide Speculation

THE TIMING WAS PERFECT—Whether or not Russia's Jacob A. Malik was sincere in his proposed cease-fire in Korea is a question that only time will answer, but of one thing the people in the home towns of America were sure—the timing was perfect.

The average man in the small towns of the country has a sincere desire for peace. He is sure of a number of things: (1) U.S. casualties now number 73,600 and he wants his sons and brothers home; (2) The war has strained the nation's bipartisan foreign policy and threatens to cause an even more serious internal split; (3) and the war has increased the dangers of inflation throughout the western world.

Perhaps the Russians realized these facts and picked the first anniversary of the start of the Korean war for their peace move. But the move was unusual in that Malik made no reference to any of the Korean peace conditions previously set by the Soviet bloc: a deal on Formosa, admission of Communist China to the United Nations, and withdrawal of foreign troops from Korea. It could be that the Soviet is sincere. But it could also be that the Soviet recognized the great propaganda potentialities of a peace move at this time.

The Silent Enemy

Rain and mud have taken over the battlefields of Korea as the silent enemy of the foot soldiers. And while peace rumors circulate throughout the world, the fighting and dying goes on.

The home towners of the nation would do well to remember, however, that Russia is not officially in the war. The next step is up to the Chinese Communists. If the Chinese, who have made no comment on Malik's proposition, indicate what he said actually reflects a change in their Korean policy and a desire to end the fighting, then the man on Main Street can allow himself to hope for peace.

However, if the Chinese ignore the whole business, or restate their earlier demands for U.N. membership and control of Formosa, as the price for a Korean settlement, then the suspicion that Malik was more interested in making propaganda than in making peace will be confirmed.

The U.S. state department has indicated a willingness to play its part in bringing an end to the hostilities in Korea if Malik's offer "is more than propaganda." But until there is some concrete evidence of sincerity in the proposal the U.S. will act with caution.

At the moment that seems the only sensible attitude to adopt. It is one the home towners may find best to follow.

THE BALANCE SHEET—As the first year of conflict ended in Korea, the fighting was as bloody and dirty as the day it began. But the balance sheet would indicate the Communists have lost the first round in their planned aggression.

On the credit side of the ledger: (1) The first U.N. battle force was raised and integrated in the initial bloody weeks; (2) the U.S. and her allies were dynamited into world-wide alertness and rearmament; (3) American military forces have learned valuable military lessons, developed new techniques, and tested much of the enemy's strategy; (4) the west has proved it will not abandon the small nations of Asia and Europe; and (5) the North Korean army has been mangled and the Chinese have had startling losses, estimated in all at 1,162,500 casualties.

On the other side of the ledger: (1) Allied casualties have been heavy for peaceful nations (approximately 352,500); (2) most of the west's military strength has been hobbled to a peninsula of secondary world-wide importance; (3) the Russians have lost only one known combat man in battle; (4) conflict has hastened the financial drain and made inflation more dangerous in the west; (5) Communists still retain the initiative, in Korea and throughout the world.

THE YEAR OF INFLATION—Since the Korean war began on June 25, 1950, livestock prices in this country have increased $3 to $10 a hundred pounds. At the same time, livestock production was much greater during the past 12 months than the preceding twelve.

A year ago hogs were no higher than $20.50. Today they are selling at $23.50, and last summer went to $25.50 a hundred pounds.

The cattle trade is about $6 a hundred pounds higher than a year ago although production ran 20 per cent above the 12 months preceding the start of the war. When the war broke out, steers were selling downward from $31.50. Currently they are topping at $38.50.

Sheep and lamb production has changed slightly, but prices have developed much higher. Best lambs are about $34.50 now, down from $42.50 in March, but compared with $28.50 a year ago. Ewes are topping at $17.50 now, down from 25 in February, compared with $10.50 a year ago.

The Home Front Battle

On the home front the battle to keep down prices was the issue of special groups. The CIO entered the fray by launching a drive for tighter anti-inflation controls.

RECORD-BREAKING TAX—By a vote of 233 to 160, the house approved a record-breaking $7,200,000,000 tax increase, including a 12½ per cent boost in individual income taxes.

The measure is now before the senate where the finance committee is holding hearings. The senate is expected to approve the bill, possibly with a few minor changes.

Here is where the government would collect the additional money: Individuals, $2,847,000,000; corporate income and excess profits taxes, $2,855,000,000; excise taxes, $1,252,000,000; and miscellaneous changes in the revenue laws, $245,000,000.

PARIS TALKS END—After 16 weeks of futile talks, the deputy foreign ministers of the United States, Britain, France and Russia broke off their efforts to write a program of a big four conference to ease world tension.

But they left the door open for their governments to make one last attempt to arrange a meeting of the big four foreign ministers, which has been suggested for July 23 in Washington.

No one in the diplomatic world believed that the Russians would accept the invitation.

STARTLING EXPERIMENT

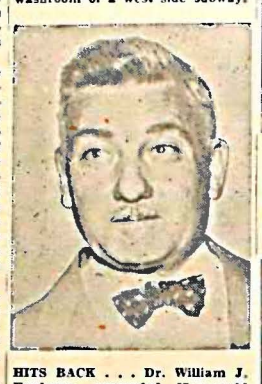
Spray Keeps Vegetables Fresh a Year

Results of experiments with a new spray — meleic hydrazide — which keeps potatoes, onions and several other vegetables fresh for a year or more, was reported by The Country Gentleman.

The spray arrests growth. Growth is so slow after spraying that the vegetables fail even to die at the rapid rate normal during storage. Every living process seems slowed down. Flavor and firmness are retained for a long time, apparently for about a year.

Scientists reported experiments were so successful they "could hardly believe them possible." Crops are sprayed before gathering. The spray does not affect the yield. It has been used successfully on potatoes, onions, carrots, beets, parsnips and turnips.

ABANDONED BABE . . . Nurse Marilyn Hague is shown caring for a week-old baby boy in the New York foundling hospital. The infant was found abandoned in the ladies' washroom of a west side subway.



HITS BACK . . . Dr. William J. Fordrung, suspended 57-year-old professor at Hunter college, is shown speaking at the college where he struck back against his ouster on charges of a "sensational and unwholesome approach" to teaching sex hygiene.

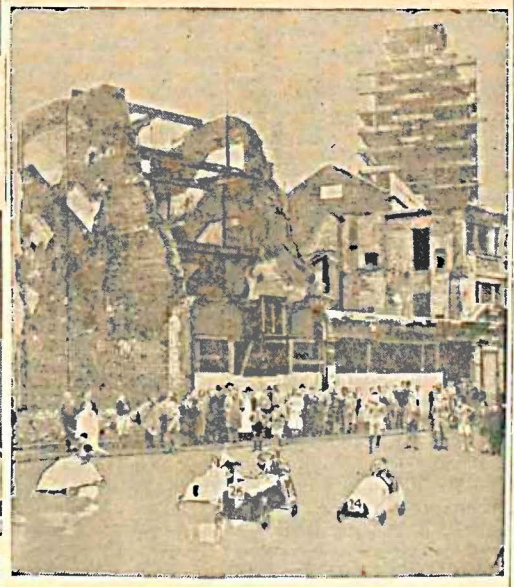
THIS'LL HOLD YOU . . . Louis Morales, 13, licks an ice cream cone held by an emergency policeman as another policeman uses hacksaw to cut away bars imprisoning the youngster. Louis stuck in his head, and couldn't get it out.

HE'S HAPPY NOW . . . Richard Wyzkowski, 4, of Cleveland's east side, has a broken nose, two black eyes, cauliflower left ear, a head covered with fresh wounds, and old scars and bruises all over his body. He was taken from mother and father and put in detention home. Father reportedly beat him.

SOMETHING SMELLS . . . Once dapper Mickey Cohen holds his nose in manner of discontent at conviction on four counts of income tax evasion. Embroidery on shirt forms contrast with blue denims. Cohen said, "it ain't the end."

HONEYMOON ANGLE . . . Symbolic of thousands of honeymooning June brides and grooms are Tony and Ann Baker of Berwyn, Ill. The young couple spent their honeymoon time at Wisconsin Dells, "Playground of the Middlewest." Photo shows them in the gravity-defying "wonder spot." They feel like they are standing straight and erect, but here is the way they appear. Leaning slightly to port, we would say.

WHATIZZIT WHETS CURIOSITY . . . When the museum of modern art opened its young sculptors' salon in Paris it gave the youngsters something to wonder about. One young Parisian is doing his wondering here, holding his head and trying to figure out just what was in the mind of the creator of sculpture in front of him. If you use your imagination a little, you may be able to see a squatting figure playing a clarinet or a saxophone. Sez Who?



ANALOGY: PEACE AND WAR . . . The sharp contrast between times of peace and the years of war can still be found in the city of London. With bomb ruins as an unspectacular backdrop, the annual London soap-box derby is shown as it got under way. The "derby" was organized by the boy scout organization and has created a great deal of enthusiasm with the English youngsters. No. 26 should have a periscope.

DISCUSS INDICTMENT . . . FBI director J. Edgar Hoover and U.S. Attorney General Howard McGrath are shown as they met at the department of justice to discuss indictment of 21 top-ranking Communists. Netted in the swift FBI raids in New York and Pittsburgh, 17 of the 21 are now in custody. A nation-wide dragnet had been spread for the missing four at the time this picture was taken. Swift prosecution is expected by observers.

Men Will Trail As Woolies Play Follow-a-Leader

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Wanted: Men who can live alone and like it while chaperoning thousands of strong-minded but misguided females.

For such a job applicants must have plenty of common sense, more than a little knowledge of psychology, and a capacity for endless walking. Their prospective charges, observes the National Geographic Society, are among the most unpredictable of their sex, belonging as they do to the sheep family.

Today the wages offered for sheepherding are the highest in the occupation's long and colorful history—about $250 monthly and found (food and sleeping equipment). Yet the shortage of competent herders in the U.S. is so acute that late reports blame it for an "alarming" decrease in the nation's wool production. In an attempt to remedy this deficiency, efforts are being made to bring to this country groups of the finest sheepherders in the world, the Basques of northern Spain. They are reputed to have not only the necessary experience but —even more important—the indispensable temperament for the job.

All Jump

Such temperament appears to be alien to most Americans, whose disenchantment with sheep tending has fathered the canard that herders are either eccentric already or likely to become so. Actually the opposite is nearer the truth since resourcefulness and understanding of the erratic feminine behavior in the sheep family are necessary to match and master flighty woolies. (Most males are slaughtered for meat while lambs.)

The first concern of a good herder is to keep his flock together, for "a sheep alone is a sick sheep." Essentially timid animals and easily frightened, sheep follow the dictates of the herd instinct, with few exceptions. They hate to go over the brow of a hill because of what might be on the other side, yet they will blindly follow a leader.

Little Lost Lambs

The herder's problems are multiplied during lambing time. A newborn lamb a few feet away from its mother is lost. The mother can only locate her stray lamb by its smell, which would mean sniffing through an entire herd. Most ewes are conscientious mothers but some take maternal duties with exasperating indifference.

One remedy is to imprison the ewe with her lamb, holding the mother still while the baby feeds, until she accepts responsibility. If the ewe refuses, she is marked for mutton and her lamb must be cared for in other ways. Clothed in the skin of a dead lamb, the unwanted "bum" may be adopted by the dead lamb's mother. Otherwise the "bum" must be bottle-fed by the herder.

After lambing season, from March through May, the herder looks forward to shearing in June. The heavy wool is another hazard in the sheep's life. An animal caught on its back and weighed down by wool may die within the hour if the shepherd does not help it to its feet.

One experienced herder voiced this despairing opinion of his charges: "A sheep is the one animal that's born with an ambition to die as soon as possible."

Experts Support Return To Old-fashioned Methods

CHICAGO—When it comes to baby care, the old-fashioned way is best, a Detroit physician told the Illinois State Medical Society.

Speaking before the sections on Obstetrics and Gynecology and on Pediatrics at the Society's 111th annual meeting in the Hotel Sherman, Dr. John C. Montgomery of Detroit cast his vote, based on long experience, against the modern hospital's newfangled central nursery.

The new idea in obstetrics is called "rooming-in." It means placing the baby with the mother immediately after birth and making her and the father responsible for its care from the beginning. Hospital practice of recent years has been to separate them until they leave the hospital, except for brief visits.

"Rooming-in is being accepted in a wider area throughout the country," Dr. Montgomery said, after an extensive review of the pros and cons. "It is nothing new, but rather a return to an older method of care and one which is still employed in many parts of the world."

One Fling on High Wire Changes Boy's Ambitions

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — Audie Jessie Baker, 10, always thought that he wanted to be an acrobat when he grew up. Recently, however, he had cause to change his mind.

The youngster was watching some linemen stringing wire in back of his house. When they began to take slack on a piece of wire, he grabbed it.

Up he went like a shot—30 feet into the air. It was all fun, until he looked down. His screams attracted neighbors, who rigged a blanket net for him to drop into.

Now he wants to be a preacher.

THE WASHINGTON Merry Go Round

BY...DREW PEARSON

Attack on Marshall

SENATE Democratic leaders called an emergency off-the-record huddle the other day to decide how to meet Senator McCarthy's 60,000-word attack on Secretary of Defense Marshall.

Minnesota's fiery Sen. Hubert Humphrey suggested a mass walkout when McCarthy got up to speak. Pointing out how Hitler started his rise to power by tearing down the heroes of the German republic, Humphrey snorted his disgust at McCarthy's tactics.

"There are many ways to destroy people—sometimes by outright murder, sometimes through the process of attrition," declared Humphrey. "I mean character assassination, misrepresentation and quoting out of context. This is the most inhumane way."

The senator from Minnesota suggested that the Democrats had only two alternatives—"either stand up and fight back which is almost impossible to do when McCarthy controls the floor, or remove ourselves from the scene of the unsavory conduct."

However, Sen. Lyndon Johnson of Texas favored sending in a conservative southern Democrat to hit back at McCarthy. Anyone else who tried it would be branded as a Communist by McCarthy, Johnson observed. He suggested George of Georgia or Byrd of Virginia, since Marshall lives in Virginia and Byrd made the original motion in favor of Marshall's nomination.

However, McMahon of Connecticut warned that it was an "impossibility trying to debate with McCarthy, because you never can pin him to the facts of the issue."

He added that Marshall had stature enough to withstand the McCarthy blast and suggested that the McCarthyites had lost the MacArthur fight, and McCarthy's attack on Marshall was "a deliberate attempt to gain the offensive again.

Serving Two Masters

The next government agency to get in hot water with congress may be the securities and exchange commission, which polices Wall Street and the big corporations.

The SEC is the only agency which has failed to answer a questionnaire, sent out by alert Pennsylvania Congressman Francis Walter, asking for the names of employees who had given up their government jobs to work for the same companies which they once regulated when they were government officials.

The manner in which some officials have used their government positions to do favors for private companies, then have gone to work for the same companies at higher salaries, is a national scandal.

Probable reason why the SEC is keeping silent is that the answers would be embarrassing. For example, SEC would have to tell how it reversed a recommendation to dissolve the United Corporation, after several former SEC employees were hired by United.

Organized by J. P. Morgan, United Corporation is a giant holding company which gives Wall Street bankers control over several power and electric companies. In 1942 the SEC staff recommended dissolving this parent corporation under the holding company act and on the grounds that it served no useful purpose except to perpetuate banker control.

However, the bankers turned round and hired several SEC officials, including some who had worked on the very recommendation to dissolve the United Corporation. First to move over to United was William M. Hickey, who had been assistant director of SEC's public utilities division. Suddenly in April, 1943, he became president of United Corporation.

In addition, John J. Burns, SEC counsel in the early days, became United's senior counsel; E. Carey Kennedy, ex-SEC analyst, became vice president of the company; and Edward Roll, formerly a minor SEC official became assistant to United's president.

Following this, the SEC strangely had a change of heart and did not dissolve the United Corporation. Last year, a new proceeding was initiated, but again the bankers resorted to the same tactics, and SEC's counsel in charge of the public utilities division legal staff, Harry Slater, overnight became assistant counsel of United's chief subsidiary.

Washington Pipeline

The White House has received a report from Maury Maverick, ex-mayor of San Antonio, on the difficulty San Antonio's present mayor, Jack White, had in getting a reception committee to welcome General MacArthur. Gen Walter Krueger, the top general serving under MacArthur in the Pacific, was too busy to serve . . . The time to watch for John L. Lewis's rumored coal strike is after the miners go off on the midsummer vacation.

The Hearing Ends

WITH THE MacArthur hearing brought to an abrupt close, many Democrats and Republicans believe the result of the millions of words of testimony is a net approval of President Truman's ouster of his far east commander.

As pointed out in this column several weeks ago, the investigation turned into a political tug-of-war. Despite the many witnesses and the voluminous testimony, not a single mind was changed insofar as the congress was concerned.

There is little question that President Truman had the authority to remove MacArthur; that the general did disobey the orders of his superiors; and that he was so far out of step with the policy of his government that he could not be trusted further to carry out the orders of the chiefs of staff and the commander-in-chief.

The man who was supposed to bolster the MacArthur viewpoint was Lt. Gen. Albert Wedemeyer. While he did uphold MacArthur on many points, he nullified part of his testimony when Sen. John J. Sparkman asked: "General, in case of a disagreement between a field commander (Gen. MacArthur) and the joint chiefs, to whom should we look for guidance?"

Wedemeyer answered: "The joint chiefs of staff without question, sir."

Political Implications

There are two new political implications in the MacArthur controversy: (1) The general, in his last Texas appearance, made what has been called a political speech attacking the Truman administration on domestic policies; (2) Sen. Joseph McCarthy of Wisconsin, attempting to regain the initiative in the MacArthur controversy, made a particularly vicious attack on Gen. George C. Marshall.

The Washington Evening Star had this to say about McCarthy's attack on Marshall: "It is a shame that the senate should be used for such monstrous effort at character assassination, and it is a greater shame that not one of Senator McCarthy's Republican colleagues saw fit to stand up and denounce him. It is impossible to believe, however, that this attempt to destroy General Marshall with the "big-lie" technique will succeed. Some Americans have swallowed a lot of Senator McCarthy's rantings. But this is too big a dose for any one in his right mind to swallow."

• • •

Senators Walk Out

Although the senators walked out on McCarthy, and even the gallery emptied, three Republicans sat through his speech, which called General Marshall a traitor, and applauded. They were Wherry, the Republican minority leader, Lagar of North Dakota, and Hendrickson of New Jersey.

Here is how one Republican senator viewed the new low in McCarthyism. Said Sen. William Jenner of Indiana: "I am glad he (McCarthy) did it. It makes me look better."

• • •

Await Taft Comment

Many are wondering what Senator Taft of Ohio might have to say, if anything, about the McCarthy smear of General Marshall.

It is believed that Taft will open his campaign for the GOP presidential nomination in Maine in August. It will be remembered on one previous occasion, when McCarthy was making his unsubstantiated charges against Secretary of State Dean Acheson and the state department, Taft was quoted by the Associated Press as telling McCarthy to keep on making charges and that "if one case didn't work to bring up others."

• • •

Washington Rumor

There is an interesting story making the rounds of Washington. For what it is worth, it goes like this:

Col. Robert McCormick of the Chicago Tribune and Washington Times-Herald, had made a deal to back Senator Taft for the GOP presidential nomination, and Congressman Dirksen of Illinois for Vice President. Now, however, taking advantage of the MacArthur controversy, he is running the 71-year-old general as a full-fledged candidate for president. The story is he has obtained an agreement from Senator Taft to take the second spot on the ticket. It is hard to believe that even for support of the powerful Chicago Tribune Senator Taft would enter into any such agreement.

More Reds Arrested

The series of F.B.I. dawn raids, netting 17 Communist officials, is another indication of the government's determination to keep the party under control.

The government charged the 17 with plotting to wage an underground campaign to overthrow the United States government by violence.

They were among 21 Communists slated to take over control of the party when 11 convicted Red leaders go to jail.

SYNTHETIC BLOOD EXTENDER

PVP-Macrose May Solve Nation's Need for Synthetic Blood Plasma

One of the biggest headaches of civil defense—how to stockpile blood for disaster use—is on the way to being eased by science.

Facilities have been set up to mass-produce a synthetic "blood extender," a chemical fluid that can be used in place of whole blood or plasma in certain types of treatment.

The product is PVP-Macrose, or polyvinyl pyrrolidone. It could be a major aid in caring for shock resulting from burns or wounds, and might save your life in the event of an atomic attack.

Dr. Charles E. Dutchess demonstrates how a container of PVP-Macrose is suspended during its administration to a patient.

Orders have been placed by Schenley Laboratories, Inc., for sufficient material to make 7,000,000 pints of the product. The firm is geared to bottle PVP at a rate of 300,000 pints per month.

Ten thousand bottles of PVP have been turned over to the National Research Council, which is evaluating it for use by the armed forces and other government agencies. Under NRC direction, tests on the product have been under way since shortly after January 1 at more than 20 hospitals and research laboratories throughout the country.

First supplies of "radio-active" PVP, useful in studying the chemical's behavior in the body, are being distributed to research scientists.

• • •

THIS "BLOOD EXTENDER," however, cannot duplicate all the physiological functions of human plasma. As a result, availability of a PVP stockpile in this country will not affect the need for whole blood or plasma. These advantages were listed for PVP:

1. It is completely synthetic, can be made in unlimited quantities, is not dependent on healthy human donors, can be stockpiled indefinitely.

2. It does not require refrigeration or blood typing and its administration is free from allergic reaction in the body.

3. It can be produced at a fraction of the cost of blood or derivatives of blood.

4. It is ideally suited for disaster use.

PVP-Macrose is known as Periston in Germany, where it first was discovered in 1939 and subsequently was used on 500,000 German battle casualties in World War II. Schenley Laboratories is importing the intermediate-stage material from the western zone of Germany, under contract agreement. It is expected that a U.S. source of supply of the intermediate-stage material will be available this year.

Medical authorities estimate that the needs for plasma or "blood extenders" would run as high as 4,000,000 pints if a single atom bomb struck a major metropolitan center. The nation's ordinary peacetime needs alone for blood are about 4,500,000 pints a year. During the entire World War II period less than 14,000,000 pints of whole blood were collected.

then returned to the stage. "Portrait of Jennie" was his first film, then came "Adam's Rib". That role as the murderer in "M" was just what he had been looking for, and some folks say that his performance is one of the best dramatic jobs ever to come out of Hollywood.

John Wayne, not content with being No. 1 box office star, has conferred with Mexican officials on plans for filming "The Alamo", with himself as star, producer and director. He is now in Ireland, working in "The Quiet Man", which John Ford is directing. Maureen O'Hara, Mildred Natwick, Barry Fitzgerald, Ward Bond, and Arthur Shields appear with him.

Republic Pictures lists "The Quiet Man" as one of 12 of its new films; they all sound good. Richard Tregaskis, the war correspondent, went to Indonesia to do research for "Fair Wind to Java"; "Hoodlum Empire" will be based on Bob Considine's racketeering expose and the Kefauver committee hearings. "Iron Master" tells of the discovery of iron ore in Minnesota.

Ralph Locke, who plays the kindly, philosophic "Papa David" on "Life Can Be Beautiful", is an expert sailor; living on Upper Manhattan near the East River, he has two sail boats, has sailed alone clear to Maine.

THE FICTION CORNER
MUMPS—KEEP OUT

By Paul Tulien

HIGH UP in the apple tree ten-year-old Tommy Thorne pondered on the ways of women. Why did his sister Winifred prefer George Butler when she could have a swell guy like Frank Stanton? Why was she going to the ball game in town tonight with George after she had turned down Frank?

3-Minute Fiction

It didn't make sense.

Next year probably she and George would be married. Now, had it been Frank it would be something to look forward to.

It would be fun if he could think of some way to scare George when he came tonight. Not that it would change Winifred's opinion of George, but it would be fun anyway.

Then he remembered a "MUMPS—KEEP OUT!" sign he had picked up in a trash dump a few months before. At the time he hadn't expected ever to put it to such a good use.

The more he thought about the idea the better he liked it. What would George do when he saw the sign on the front of the house? He bet the old fraidy-cat would leave in a hurry.

But he must be careful. He wished he knew exactly what time George would come. If he put up the sign too early, one of his own folks might see it before George came. And that, of course, would be the end of it. On the other hand if he waited too long George might come before the sign was up.

IN THE early dusk Tommy crouched behind a clump of bushes. Slowly the minutes dragged by. At last a car turned into the driveway. George Butler got out of the car, started for the house, stopped—and then hurriedly got into the car again and drove off. Tommy sprang up; his plan had worked perfectly, but he must not let Winifred see what he had done.

"So, Smartypants, I'll have to sit home tonight just because you must have your little joke!"

But he was too late. Winifred was staring at the sign tacked on the front of the house. He started to turn and run, but decided he might as well face the music now, for she would get hold of him sooner or later.

"So, Smartypants, I'll have to sit home tonight and twiddle my thumbs just because you must have your little joke!"

Tommy was silent for a minute, twisting one leg around the other. "Maybe you could phone and explain—he'll probably go home." The words came reluctantly for he didn't want Winifred to telephone, and if she did he hoped George wouldn't be home.

"I will NOT!" she cried hotly. "Not when he didn't care enough to see which of us was sick—why, I might be dying of mumps for all he knows—or cares!"

"People don't die of mumps, do they?"

"What difference does that make?" she retorted.

"It doesn't excuse him from asking. If he didn't dare to come to the door, he could have stood in the yard and yelled. Surely, I couldn't have thrown the mumps on him! Anyway, if I had the mumps he ought to be willing to have them too!"

It was almost too good to be true, Tommy thought. Only one thing was needed to make everything perfect and that would be for Frank to come.

And then Frank did come. He jumped out of his car and asked anxiously, "Who's sick?"

"No one. That sign's just Tommy's little joke," Winifred explained.

Frank laughed. "That's good! I just saw Jack Martin in town and he said he had seen a mumps sign on your house when he drove by. So I thought I'd come out and see if you needed any help. Say, why aren't you at the ball game?"

"How do you expect me to go? Walk? Our car's in the garage for repairs."

"Why, I thought— Well, you know I'd be awfully glad to take you in, if you care to go. And Tommy too—unless three's a crowd."

"Not when the third one's Tommy," Winifred said, putting her arm around the boy. "He did me an extra good turn tonight."

Enemies Call Average Thrifty Citizens 'Capitalists'

By Wright A. Patterson

WHO are the capitalists of America the communists and socialists howl about, and if it were possible, would destroy? Among them are the farmers, with large or small holdings. They are engaged in productive enterprises as individuals with investments in plants—their farms—and in tools—their farm implements.

Another element of the capitalist class are those owning rental properties, whether it be one small cottage or a considerable number of rental units that are providing homes for people.

Then there is that vastly larger number who are stockholders in business, large or small, and in transportation facilities. This class consists of many more than four million, all of them American capitalists. Among that four million are many thousands of workers, classed as both workers and capitalists.

This class of capitalists by its investments provides the tools of industry, and creates the 60 million jobs of America, as well as providing for their declining years; they do not have to depend on something for nothing for those years.

All together the capitalistic classes in America, including the several millions of life insurance policyholders, represent by far the larger portion of the 150 millions of American people. They are the people who make of America what America is. They are the people the socialists and communists seek to destroy by taking from them that which they have thriftily accumulated, and leaving for these thrifty Americans only a place on a park bench, where they, too, could hope for that something for nothing to be passed out by the government. The question today is: Do we want the socialists and the communists to succeed in their nefarious plans?

Those who would replace our American free enterprise system, that has made possible such a number of thrifty capitalists, whose combined investments have provided 60 million jobs, and give us instead the ideas or methods of socialism or communism, are not seeking the best interests of our America.

The free enterprise system does not provide something for nothing, but it does provide the ways and means of providing for ourselves as individuals if we are willing to make the needed effort and most of us are willing. Neither will socialism or communism, and they are much of the same kind, provide something for nothing.

The business institutions of the nation, both large and small, are making a real effort to impress upon the people that our free enterprise system is dangerously threatened.

I was reading today the 39th annual report of the Lumberman's Mutual Casualty company in which the president, James S. Kemper, devotes a chapter to that subject. In it he says: "The cunning of the Kremlin must be met by candor and courage in Washington, that men in the mass must be countered by an abiding faith that, with God's help, men are destined to be free. Private enterprise can and will provide right direction in America, and in so doing hold high the torch of liberty for the world to see."

Before the senate committee investigating the firing of MacArthur, Secretary of State Dean Acheson was a reluctant witness. He did not wish to talk about the mistakes, or worse, he had made in the far east, but the committee was insistent and out-voted him. Out of it all the people have learned the contents of the secretary's note to our diplomats in foreign nations, in which we wrote off Formosa as a part of our foreign policy. Acheson said that note was a phony.

As the politicians see it it is better to levy more taxes to provide for more unnecessary spendings, and it will be more profitable, in votes, than to reduce government payrolls and spend less.

The increasing profits of corporations the papers report are more than offset by the decreasing value of the dollars earned.

PITCHMAN ON THE PAYROLL

Post article, "How Government Pressure Boys Squander Your Money," should be required reading for Californians. For one of the outstanding examples cited in this startling expose of how "government agencies beat the drum to glorify and perpetuate themselves with expensive books, cocktail parties and thousands of paid press agents," concerns the arrogant propaganda activities of the Bureau of Reclamation here in California.

All government agencies have legal—and presumably useful—functions to perform under laws enacted by Congress. Those proper functions, by no stretch of the imagination, include lobbying at the public's expense. Yet the Post article discloses that all 1600 of the Bureau's Central Valley Project employees were officially instructed as follows:

"You are information people, everyone of you. You have got to get out and meet the folks, even joining the luncheon clubs and the Chambers of Commerce and the churches. Congress is very sensitive and susceptible to what goes on at home, and the more friends we make here the more easily it will be back in Congress to get our appropriations."

Last month a high spot in the Bureau's propangda activities was reached with the mailing from Sacramento of a two-foot long, heavy cardboard mailing tube containing a cartoon map of CVP, a 1500-word long press and radio release, a 3-page list of "fillers" describing CVP, and a sheet listing dates and places for various "water festival" celebrations during the summer. This mailing was sent not to just California newspapers but to papers all across the country! The Columbus, Georgia, Ledger ran an editorial condemning the mailing as a shocking waste of public funds and printed the map under the caption: "Note to Reds —Here are your Targets."

The Bureau of Reclamation isn't the only offender in this regard. Though the expenditure of official time or Federal funds to influence legislation is punishable by fine and imprisonment, it is apparently established procedure in a great many Federal agencies. The pitchmen on our public payroll, creating artificial desires for more and more Government services, cynically egging on each and every pressure "gimme" group, blithely spend our money to convince us that they need still more.

FROM THE NEWS CIRCUIT
JAMES DORAIS

As anyone knows who has driven along Wilshire Boulevard recently, there are a lot of people living in the City of Los Angeles, nearly 2,000,000, according to the latest census.

But big and sprawling as Los Angeles is, it isn't as big as the city of employees working for the biggest employer of all time, Uncle Sam. At last count, two months ago, there were a total of 2,410,000 civilians feeding at the Federal trough.

That huge working force almost equals the all time peak employed during the busiest years of World War II. In terms of payroll dollars, some 8 billion, 300 million a year, it sets a new record.

Since the Korean fighting began, nearly half a million employees have been added to the Federal payroll, at the rate of about 1500 a day. Logically enough, most of the new employees about 400,000 of them—have been put on by the Armed Services. But other government departments have set out the welcome mat, too.

The Labor Department, for example has increased its staff by about 8,100 employees in that department. The increase has something to do with the new consumers' price index, officials say.

The Justice Department, having succeeded in establishing its authority in the field of price control violations, naturally had to put on some 3500 new employees to take care of the added burden. The Treasury Department has added 3,200 new people, a good many of them presumably to draw paychecks for all the new employees in other Departments. And to take care of all the hiring, the Civil Service Commission had to increase its staff from 3,500 to 4,100.

The State Department has increased its number to 27,600, 2,000 more than pre-Korea, possibly because there is so much more dust that has to settle.

Then, of course, there are the new agencies that have been created since the Korean police action began. The National Production Authority, which didn't exist a year ago, now employs over 4,000 people. It takes a lot of people to authorize production, just as it takes a lot of people to stabilize prices. The Office of Price Stabilization already has 6,700 people in its employ and in another year, plans to boost its employment to some 35,000.

But it isn't just the big, well-known agencies that are expanding. Everybody's doing it, including the National Gallery of Art, which added four new employees since the outbreak of aggression in Korea.

An interesting aspect of the situation is that of the total increase of half a million persons, only 32,000 are employed in Washington, D. C., the rest being scattered all around the country. There are doubtless many reasons for that, not the least important of which is the fact that people who live in Washington can't vote.

Political Parade

CLEM WHITAKER, Jr.

When Virginia's powerful Senator Harry Byrd laid down an ultimatum to the Democratic Party, in Atlanta, Georgia, last week, the confused picture of conflicting political sentiment and allignment within the Democratic ranks began to take clearer focus.

"No Democratic President can be elected without the votes of the Southern States," Byrd warned in setting the stage for a showdown on the Democratic Platform and nominee at the Bourbon National Convention next Juy.

The statement, well-informed political observers surmise, besoke reams. It spoke of the deep split on economic and political philosophy that exists between the Truman Big Government wing of the Democratic Party and the Conservative South. It intimated, too, that unlike the Dixiecrat rebellion of 1948, this battle would be fought with the South united—with such potent figures as Governor James F. Byrnes of South Carolina and Senators Richard B. Russell and Walter George of Georgia, leading the way.

Senator Byrd, seasoned observers contend, has served notice of an alliance of the entire South that is prepared to bolt the Democratic Party if is continues to follow the Fair Deal, Statesit, line of the past. It is the greatest threat, yet, to the continued existence of the Truman Administration.

If the South, under Senator Byrd, can't gain its ends within the Democratic Party, some political analysts predict a complete reallignment of political parties in America could be in the offing.

Noting that the Republican Party is also split wide open on the basic issue of government control and ownership, these observers, to substantiate their belief, point to the rapidly crystallizing break in the GOP between supporters of the Truman program and conservative elements. With one mighty wrench, the analysts surmise, it is within the realm of possibility that both parties might disintegrate completely, as they now exist, with the conservative elements of each and liberal elements of each fusing together to bring about a complete and more realistic new political line-up in America.

The odds against such an upheaval, most all hands agree, are great. Yet the possibility is so distinct that it dare not be overlooked, for America, many politicians estimate, is just about due for a political shake-up. It isn't reasonable, the theory goes, that each party should continue being split over the same basic issue without the public demanding a reallignment so that it can make an honest choice between parties and know what it is choosing.

One other factor mitigating against the present situation—some of the shewdest political brains of the country are working to change it.

Words of Wisdom

Sunshine Gene Flack, L. A. salesman—"An executive is a guy who goes around with a worried look on the face of his assistant."

Gov. Thomas Dewey, in S. F.—"The cold war will go on for the rest of our lives, or as long as Communism rules Russia."

Carleton B. Tibbetts, L. A. industrialist—"Ability to perform rather than age should be the criterion of employment."

Gov. Earl Warren—"There are States today which . . . cannot, unless assisted by the Federal Government, maintain educational standards adequate to present day needs."

A. C. Hardison, Santa Paula, Pres. Calif. Taxpayers' Assn.—"Every dollar of Federal subsidy to California costs Californians about $1.25 in Federal taxes."

U. S. Senator Richard Nixon, Whittier — "Unless there is a change of administration in 1952, we face the prospect that there never will be a change."

Number of Farms Ahead For Decade

California is one of the three states in the country having an increase in number of farms from the period 1940 to 1950, reports Farm Advisor E. C. Moore of the University of California Agricultural Extension Service. The other two states are North Carolina and South Carolina.

Census gatherers reported 137,137 California farms in 1950 as compared to 132,056 in 1940. For the nation, there was a drop of 717,7556 farms in the decade. Part of this drop was due to a change in classification which required that places of fewer than three acres be counted as farms only if the value of agricultural products sold amounted to $150 or more.

Easy to Stop Leaky Faucets

Eyes will be turning to leaky faucets and other water wasting fixtures the week of July 15, which has been proclaimed Fixit Week by the Save Our Water Committee.

"There still are thousands of wasteful leaks around the county losing millions of gallons of water every month," Ralph J. Phillips, acting chairman of the Save Our Water Committee, declared as he announced Fixit Week was designed to make San Diego county water tight.

Business establishments as well as householders were urged to check faucets, shower heads, toilets and other water using fixtures and equipment, inside and out, for leaks. To have them all repaired by the time Fixit Week closes Saturday noon is the objective.

The Associated Plumbing Contractors of San Diego has announced its members will co-operate with the committee during Fixit Week by making repairs free for householders who come in and ask for them at designated plumbing shops. To find the nearest shop in your neighborhood which is offering the free service, telephone Talbot 7602 or write the association at 3554 University Avenue, San Diego 4.

If faucet stems are brought into a designated plumbing shop, the washer will be replaced free. The plumbers also are furnishing free a set of hose washers and a leak detector coloring powder which is used to check for leaks in toilet flush tanks. The Save Our Water Committee emphasized that the householder should call at the plumber's shop, that the free service could not include calls by the plumber at the home.

To remove the faucet stem from the faucet, either for replacing the washer at home or taking the stem to a plumber, was said to be an easy matter. Here's how:

First turn off the water. There usually is a shut-off valve under the lavatory or sink, but if not, turn off at the main valve where water enters the house. Then use a good sized monkey wrench or crescent wrench to unscrew the packing nut under the faucet handle. Turn counter-clockwise and back out the whole thing from the faucet. It's a good idea to pad the wrench jaws with cloth in order to protect the chrome or nickle plating of the faucet.

Now the stem is in hand. Either take it to the plumber or fix it yourself. In the latter case, simply remove the small screw which holds in the washer at the end of the stem, pry it out with the screw driver, clean the compartment and replace with a new washer which fits snugly without forcing. Then put the stem back in, tighten the packing nut, turn on the water supply and enjoy a leak-free faucet.

If a new washer does not repair the leak, the faucet valve seat may be worn. The valve seat is where the stem fits into the faucet. In such a case, the valve seat should be renewed or the faucet replaced.

Virtually all faucets inside and outside the home are repaired in the manner described and so are shower heads. In the case of showers, there is a cone-shaped trim or cover which is first removed after shutting off the water. Then two hexagonal nuts will be seen. Unscrew the larger one in order to remove the whole threaded stem and proceed as in the case of faucet repair.

Sports Scene

By ROGER CONLEE

A third Grossmont High graduate to enter professional baseball is Frank Wilburn, star first-baseman and pitcher. Others were Ray Preston, and Bob Rand.

Wilburn, who received a bonus to sign with the Pittsburg Pirates last week, batted over .350 during the 1951 City League season. Frank's aggressiveness was one of the main reasons Grossmont became Southern California champions.

As a pitcher he was tops too, winning two of the three games in which he worked. Wilburn will report to the Pittsburg training camp next Spring.

Gillespie pool's popularity was evident as the pool management announced the beginning of night swimming this week. Starting July 18, night swims will be on Tuesdays and Fridays from 7:00 to 9:30. The pool is at Gillespie Air Field, Santee.

El Cajon Little League play last weekend found the following results: Rotary Club 2, Exchange Club 1; Elks Club 7, Kiwanis 3. Bobby Patchett and Bill O'Brien teamed up to pitch a no-hitter against Exchange Club in the former game.

Every Saturday night the Jalopies roar at Lakeside Arena. The El Cajon Valley oval is the scene of the speed races at 8:00 each week. Several drivers from all over the county perform at these races.

No doubt one of the happiest homes in Lemon Grove is that of Mr. and Mrs. Roxie Stewart, 7400 Canton Drive, for their first grandchild, a son, was born Sunday to Lt. (jg) Donald Ross Stewart U. S. N., and Mrs. Stewart at Mercy Hospital. He has been named Roger Ross. His maternal grandmother is Mrs. Kasenia Pet'owany of Cleveland, Ohio.

Roger's parents are residing here while the Lieutenant's ship is being put in commission.

Mrs. John W. Hale, (Connie Stewart) of Manhattan Beach is here for a month's visit.

Large Groups See Cancer Films

In the first six months of this year, one out of every 10 persons in San Diego County viewed a film and program arranged by the San Diego County Branch of the American Cancer Society, Dr. Charles T. Smith, president, has reported.

In reviewing the public education activities of the American Cancer Society for the first half of 1951, Smith also pointed out that 250,000 leaflets and other pieces of literature were distributed in the county to emphasize the seven danger signals of cancer.

Large groups that saw Cancer Society films included:

Four hundred college students; 2,000 San Diego High School students; 100 vocational students; staffs of the Scripps and Oceanside Hospitals; student nurse groups at County Hospital and Paradise Valley Hospital; and 100 Gas and Electric Company women employees.

Women employees of the Telephone Company are viewing the films in groups, and when the project is completed, all employees in San Diego and Imperial Counties will have seen the films.

Another major project is the showing of cancer films to Naval personnel. Already, 25,000 persons at the Naval Training Center have viewed the programs, along with groups at the Naval Air Station and the Naval Hospital. The goal is to reach every person in the 11th Naval District, both civilian and military.

Smith also pointed out that a barrage of newspaper, radio, television and other types of publicity, particularly during the 1951 Cancer Crusade, carried the public information message regarding cancer control to persons in San Diego County.

Are once friendly neighbors now acting cool towards you? Maybe it is because you have not become a water miser like the others in the neighborhood have. Think it over.

Why Eddie Arcaro Often Loses

By GRANTLAND RICE

What! No Tips?

(Florida has abolished all racing news and information. News item.)

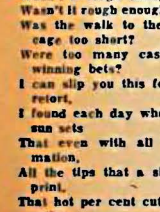
Wasn't it tough enough before?
Wasn't it rough enough to score?
Was the walk to the cashier's cage too short?
Were too many cashing their winning bets?
I can slip you this for a quick retort,
I found each day when the red sun sets
That even with all the information,
All the tips that a sheet could print,
That hot per cent cut the daily ration
And kept me blocked from an open mint,
I wonder what made a some-body sore?
I wasn't getting too rich before.

The Case of Eddie Arcaro

Practically all racing experts, if any, will tell you Eddie Arcaro is the best race rider in the world. Against this many solid horse players, if any, will tell you that they never bet Eddie Arcaro in any race unless it's a big stake.

Most of the trainers want Arcaro for stake races. Few horse players want him, race after race.

Here is a note from one of them: "Why is it that Eddie Arcaro wins more big stakes than any other rider, and yet loses so often on better horses in other races? I've seen Arcaro ride favorites either last or out of the money more often than any rider I ever saw. I've seen him run last, four races in succession, each time riding the top horse. At Santa Anita he was set down 10 days for careless and indifferent riding. They say many of his mounts are false favorites, the odds lowered because Arcaro is riding them. This is strictly the bunk. Arcaro gets his pick of horses more than any other rider. He should lead the jockeys by a big margin. Yet Ted Atkinson outrides him two to one, day after day. So do others. I've seen Eddie Arcaro in any number of ordinary races get away badly and after that make no effort to get up with the pack. You may ask why so many boo a rider who can win so many stakes. My answer is that the racing public realizes Arcaro has so much money that he is only interested in his cut, with no interest at all in the horse players who may be backing his mount. Or in winning a race for the jockey's normal fee.



Grantland Rice

"You might be surprised to know how many horse players I know who refuse to back Arcaro on anything except a big stake. One has to admit this season that Arcaro has a poor percentage for average races, considering the fact that most owners and trainers would rather have him.

"Many trainers don't place Ted Atkinson in his class. For all of that, many, many horse players would rather have Atkinson, or Colineri, Guerin or even Cole than the winner of four Kentucky Derbies.

"Whether he means to or not Arcaro gives you the impression that he is only mildly interested, if that much, in many run-of-the-day trials. It is something Arcaro should watch, or look for the booing to grow."

The Jockey Angle

Veteran jockeys such as Eddie Arcaro and Johnny Longden, two of the wealthiest, two of the oldest, rarely take any chances. A big stake is a little different, but the average race must take care of itself. Neither Arcaro or Longden wants to dive for that slender, hazardous opening that an apprentice would impetuously rush for.

The jockey is in a tough game. It is rougher than pro football or any other sport, including hockey. Young riders have to take certain chances. Few veterans care for any brand of risk. Especially if they are well fixed financially and can still be nominated to ride in big stakes for the 10 per cent cut.

Arcaro, for example, usually has his pick of the major stakes. Last year he had Hill Prince—the best horse of 1950. This year he was offered Battlefield and Bold. These two are certainly top.

There isn't any doubt that on certain days, or in a race he wants badly, Eddie Arcaro is a brilliant rider. He has the skill and hand strength to handle any horse. He is a brilliant judge of pace. He is smart. But in many average races, there is some doubt whether Eddie rides as much to win as he does for exercise. As fine a jockey as Arcaro shouldn't ride so many bad races, if he was continually going all out as Ted Atkinson and others nearly always do. He rides too many poor or just ordinary races for his own good.

What Bass Eat

Largemouth bass eat a wide variety of foods. Insects and small fishes form a large part of their diet, and crayfish and frogs also are taken rather frequently. The young bass feed largely on water fleas during their first few weeks, after which aquatic insects and small fish comprise an increasingly large part of their food.

Largemouths in the southern states grow more rapidly than do those in northern waters, because the growing season is longer. However, the southern fish seldom live longer than eight years, while a maximum age of 15 years has been recorded for northern members of the species. As a matter of interest it may be noted that the world's record largemouth, caught in Florida, weighed slightly over 22 pounds.

The baits used successfully in bass fishing are many and varied. Some of the more widely used natural baits are minnows, crayfish, grasshoppers and helgramites. Artificial baits include a large variety of both surface and underwater lures for use on casting reds or flyrods. Among these are flies, popping bugs, floating and deep-running plugs, and spoons.

It may be safely stated that no matter when, where, or how you fish, you'll never forget the thrill of landing a largemouth which can qualify for the proud name "old lineside."

Duck Outlook

All signs indicate that the masses of waterfowl breeding in western Canada are determined to make 1951 one of the most productive seasons in recent years. Their chief ally is Mother Nature, this semester apparently in one of her most beneficent moods.

Summing up general waterfowl conditions in the June issue of the "Duckological," Bert W. Cartwright, chief naturalist of Ducks Unlimited (Canada), reports, "Duck breeding conditions and surface waters are more uniformly ideal from Western Ontario across the prairies to the Rocky Mountains and from the International boundary north to the Peace River district in north-western Alberta, than they have been in any previous year since Ducks Unlimited started in 1938."

For The Defense

The persecution of beneficial hawks has gone on for centuries, and from the files of the Cincinnati Conservation Society, which is making an extensive study of hawks and owls, some of the reasons for this perseeution have come forth.

English game keepers shot hawks for centuries. These were the true "bird hawks", similar to our bluedarters, the sharp - shinned and Cooper's hawks. When the colonists came to these shores all birds of prey were considered hawks. The slow-flying Buteos, like the redtail, which were called "buzzards" in England, became lumped with the damage-doing darters. All hawks, to the layman, are "chicken hawks". Our beneficial hawks have suffered ever since.

The soaring hawks, or mouse hawks, are easily hit with a shotgun, and they bear the brunt of the persecution. These are the birds you see strung up along fences; a tribute to the farmer's ignorance of the good they do.

No "Kid Stuff"

Richard Cameron, Pittsfield, Mass., is a candidate for the Algerstory fishing hero of the year in Maine.

With an $11 trout-fishing outfit, young Cameron confounded, recently, all of the seasoned Atlantic salmon fishermen on the Narraguagus river, Cherryfield.

It was his first Atlantic salmon fishing trip, yet with a 4-oz. rod, four-lb. test leader and No. 8 bucktail fly, he took two huge salmon in one day. The first, an 11-pounder, provided such a thrill that Cameron moved up-river from Academy pool to Little Falls pool and proceeded to strike a "One-That-Didn't-Get-Away Club" lunker weighing 16 lbs. and 11-ounces.

Cameron played his second salmon 2¼ hours.

"He is one of the best fishermen we've seen in this section," said Game Warden Wally Barron, Cherryfield, afterwards. "He had to be good to land such fish on trout tackle."

In Black & White

Melanism is that condition of an oversupply of black pigment in the skin. Hence, an occasional black deer, squirrel, rat or other animal, and the Melanistic Mutant pheasant which has been bred from occasional Melanistic offspring of the Ringneck.

Albinoism is the condition of a lack of pigment in the skin. So, we have an occasional white deer, squirrel or other animal, and the White pheasant.

THE Once over

BY H.L.PHILLIPS

DOOR BELL RINGERS ARISE

NOW we know why the United States supreme court has been acting so ornery about things lately. It used to be steady-going and dependable. But for some years it has been irascible, disputative and unreliable. The cause seems clear. It has been bothered by brush salesmen. This was revealed the other day in a sharp decision declaring, to all effects, that no salesman has any right to ring a doorbell without permission of the housewife. And written permission, too. The court held constitutional the right of any community to pass such a law. It showed less disagreement than in any case in years. (There were a couple of dissents, but these were from justices who never answer a doorbell anyhow, and just yell down "Scram.")

• • •

T. Aristotle Winch, of Winch, Winch, Smathers, Winch and Winch, this department's favorite attorney (who worked his way through college selling magazine subscriptions) declares the court off base, however. He cites Hubble versus Flatfoot (306 Mass. 84) which held that a doorbell is a doorbell and is put there to be rung. "Indeed," reads this decision, "if there is a doorbell on a house and it does not work, a salesman may even be within his rights in heaving a rock through an upper window."

• • •

Mr. Winch also cited Bottlefly versus Mrs. Potts (86, Conn. 325). In this case Mrs. Potts was forced to chop the foot off a book salesman after he had stuck it in the doorway. Bottlefly sued for a new foot. The court suspended Mrs. Potts' hatchet license saying, "Even if she had been summoned downstairs for the fourth time that morning by peddlars, the salesman was within his rights in trying to advance literature. The practice of inserting the foot in a doorway has been long allowable under common law. The argument that the defendant had a right to hack his foot off because she suspected that, failing in his effort to sell her a set of books, he would try to put over a vacuum cleaner, is hereby dismissed."

• • •

Then there is the ruling in the case of Haddock versus Crumps (46, Illinois, 76). Here Haddock, a young man, called to sell Hector Crumps subscriptions to seven periodicals, saying he was working his way through college. Crumps threw him off the porch, holding that Haddock was at least 37 years of age and that this was his sixteenth season of working his way through college. The court held that for every doorbell ringer 37 years of age seeking an education there are hundreds much younger, and their right to operate must be protected.

• • •

The most novel ruling, however, came in Stuffle versus Wimpus (33. R.I. 8197). A young man rang the bell and proposed that the tenant go to college while he moved in, subscribed to all the magazines and did the housework. Wimpus, the defendant, hit him with a chair.

The Rice Custom

The almost world-wide custom of throwing rice at newly-married couples is believed to be a survival of the ancient religious practices of the Hindus and Chinese. In the Orient, rice is the emblem of fecundity and fertility, and throwing it at a newly-wedded pair symbolizes the wish that they may be blessed with offspring.

Ancient Americans

The first white child was born in America about 1000 A. D., or 500 years before Christopher Columbus discovered it, if the claims made in an old Norse saga were based on fact. The little girl's name was Snorri Karlsefne, and she was the daughter of Gudrid and Thorfin Karlsefne, brother-in-law of Leif Ericson.

Unaccustomed As I Am . . .

Fresh from the farm, the new country constable was taking up his duties. He was a quiet, taciturn young man, and it was with considerable effort that he mustered up enough speech to remark to the resident sergeant, "You told me to be on a sharp lookout for intoxicated motorists, sir. But how will I know they're drunk?"

"If you have any doubt," his superior replied, "just ask the suspect to repeat after you: 'Surely Susan should suit Samuel Smithville.'"

"Very good, sir," the young man agreed, "I'll just write that down."

That afternoon a motor car pulled up outside the police station and unloaded the new constable. There was a handkerchief wrapped around his jaw. He had dislocated it!

Take Your Choice

A white man during reconstruction times was arraigned before a colored justice of the peace for killing a man and stealing his mule. It was in Arkansas, near the Texas border, and there was some rivalry between the states, but the colored justice tried to preserve an impartial frame of mind.

"We's got two kinds ob law in dis yer co't," he said: "Texas law an' Arkansas law. Which will you hab?"

The prisoner thought a minute and then guessed that he would take the Arkansas law.

"Den I discharge you fo' stealin' de mule, an' hang you fo' killin' de man."

"Hold on a minute, Judge," said the prisoner. "Better make that Texas law."

"All right. Den I fin' you fo' killin' de man, an' hang you fo' stealin' de mule."

Customer Curiosity

When P. T. Barnum, later of circus fame, was running his famous museum in New York, he discovered that persons were paying admission and staying for hours. The place soon became so crowded each day that others could not get in. Barnum wondered how he could empty the museum without offending his patrons, so that the turnover would be greater. Finally, he hit upon a plan. He had a sign made which he placed over a door leading to an exit into a rear street. It worked, for people soon began to follow the sign to see what new curiosity awaited them. The sign read: TO THE EGRESS.

Police!

We see by the Government report that the per capita wealth of the United States right now is $2,800. After frisking ourself carefully we find that someone has jobbed us out of just $2,777 of our share, and we need it. Please remit!

NOT AT ALL

A keen golfer had a charming girl on his right at dinner, and gave her graphic descriptions of his achievements with the clubs, hardly allowing her time to say more than "Really!"

During the dessert he remarked: "I'm afraid I've been monopolizing the conversation and talking nothing but golf."

"Oh never mind," said the girl. "But you might tell me: What is golf?"

Smiles

That's a Poke, Son

Down the street came the political boss and his hand-picked Congressman. The latter was inclined to vanity and, as they rounded a corner, he remarked with a self-satisfied expression, "Say did you see that good-looking girl smile at me?"

"Smile?" shot back the gruff political boss. "Why, the first time I saw you, I laughed out loud!"

Tour to Hades?

The American visitor was gazing down into the crater of the famous Greek volcano. Finally he commented, "It sure looks like hell!"

"Oh," retorted his guide, "you Americans—you've been everywhere!"

Quick Thinking

"Dear, didn't I hear the clock strike three when you came in?"

"You did. It started to chime eleven, but I stopped it to keep it from awakening you."

One Good Turn Deserves Better

Out of the lead car in the crack-up stepped a woman driver. A man was already coming forward from the car that had smashed into hers.

"Really, I don't understand your carelessness," complained the lady. "I turned the way I signaled I would."

"True," nodded the man, "That's what confused me."

Selecting A Water Heater

QUESTION: I'm contemplating buying a water heater. My water supply has a high lime content and I'd like to know if lime will collect on the walls of a glass-lined heater. I don't know whether to buy a water softener or not. If I can get a satisfactory length of service with a glass lined tank, minus a softener, it will mean a real saving for me. Glass lined tanks are guaranteed against rust and corrosion, but I wonder if the same holds true when there is lime in the water.

ANSWER: The lime would be less likely to stick to a glass lining than it would to a rough metal surface. It sounds like a good investment to me. Regarding a water softener, I believe you have the wrong idea as to the cost of of these units. The Architects Samples Exhibi, 101 Park Ave., New York 17, can furnish you with names of manufacturers and you may find that the price of a good one would not be at all excessive.

Safety in and on The Water

Swimming and boating are fine exercise, good fun and a popular summer sport. Water sports are safe, too, when those taking part in them practice a few rules of common sense and avoid taking chances.

No one should ever go swimming immediately after eating. It is best to wait an hour or more after a meal before going into the water. A full stomach, fatigue or extreme heat, coupled with shock of cold water and sudden exercise, can bring on cramps or exhaustion and make the swimmer powerless in the water.

A swimmer should always have companions with him in the water so that help is near in case he needs it. Long swims are only for qualified experts and even they should never swim long distances unless somebody is following nearby in a boat.

It is a tragic fact that many people are drowned while trying to save someone else. Anyone who swims often should learn the techniques of life-saving so that he can take care of himself as well as others if the occasion ever arises.

Small boats like canoes, rowboats and motor-boats are safe as well as enjoyable when people who use them know how to handle them and exercise a little caution.

Passengers, as well as pilots, should know how to swim before they get out into deep water in small boats. But an unexpected swim on a boating trip can be avoided if the boat is managed properly and passengers know how to behave.

In fact, most swimming and boating accidents can be avoided and a person can get more out of both sports if he uses common sense and makes safety first the rule in and on the water.

FARM NEWS

AGRICULTURAL EXTENSION SERVICE

Make Moths Unwelcome

Sun, air, brushing, laundering, dry cleaning and pressing are all enemies of the clothes moth. Before putting your woolens away for the summer, hang them in the sunshine and brush thoroughly not forgetting seams and pockets. If soiled, launder them, or have them dry cleaned if they are not washable.

Delphine Wilson, Home Advisor of the University of California Agricultural Extension Service, warns that even with this care, moths may get into the woolens if they are not properly stored. They should be wrapped and sealed immediately after cleaning. Put the clean wool articles in tightly sealed paper bags or boxes, chests, trunks or glass jars or tin boxes.

If moths have been a problem, take further precautions and use paradichlorobenzene or napthalene flakes or moth balls when storing woolens. These leave an odor, so woolens must be aired thoroughly before using them again. Instead of these chemicals, an insect spray or even DDT can be applied generously with no odors or damage to the articles.

All the chemicals give off gas as they evaporate and either kill or repel the moths, depending upon the amount used.

Tests show that a pound of flakes or moth balls are required for each 100 cubic feet of storage space. Mrs. Wilson recommends about a half a pound of flakes or balls for a chest or trunk with a tight lid. Since the fumes go downwards, put flakes in a cloth sack, and place it in the upper shelf or top of chest or hang it high in the closet. Keep the storage space closed as much as possible.

How many ways have you discovered to save our water? Make a list of all of them. Keep the list until you get the water saving habit.
